Artificial Intelligence - Test Document

Machine Learning is a branch of Artificial Intelligence that enables computers to learn patterns from data.

Supervised Learning uses labeled data. Examples include classification and regression.

Unsupervised Learning works with unlabeled data. Clustering is one of its common applications.

RAG means Retrieval-Augmented Generation. It retrieves relevant information from documents and provides that information to a language model to help generate an answer.